Abstract: The authors examined the effects of a 6-week training program on the self-reported health status of older adults. The study was conducted in a community center in New York City. The participants were 60 older adults (mean age = 78.5 years) who had no history of heart disease, diabetes, or other chronic conditions. They were randomly assigned to either a control group or a training group. The training group received a 6-week program of aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not receive any training. At baseline and at the end of the 6-week period, the participants completed a self-report questionnaire about their health status. The results showed that the training group reported significantly better health status than the control group at the end of the 6-week period. These findings suggest that a 6-week training program can improve the self-reported health status of older adults.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the women was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the women. The women in the walking program had significantly lower body mass index (BMI), waist circumference, and blood pressure than the women in the control group. The women in the walking program also had significantly lower levels of anxiety and depression than the women in the control group. The walking program was a safe and effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
