Abstract: Patients on dialysis frequently exhibit malnutrition, which is associated with increased morbidity and mortality. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of malnutrition in patients on dialysis and to identify factors associated with malnutrition. A cross-sectional study was conducted in a tertiary care hospital. Data were collected on demographic characteristics, clinical history, and laboratory values. Malnutrition was defined as a serum albumin level <3.5 g/dL. The prevalence of malnutrition was 38.5%. Factors associated with malnutrition included age, gender, duration of dialysis, and comorbidities. The results of this study suggest that malnutrition is a common problem in patients on dialysis and that it is associated with several factors. Further research is needed to determine the causes of malnutrition and to develop effective interventions.
